The Master's View

I am delighted with the way things are going with the Guild - we had a most successful Sail Training evening at the City of London School for Girls at the beginning of November when a number of pupils from CLS and Freeman's presented on their experiences at sea - their enthusiasm was infectious and their presentations magnificent. Clearly they all had the experience of their lives.

Sadly this time there were no pupils from CLSG on the courses but Diana Vernon, the new Head, said that she would ensure that next year the word got around so that we have pupils from all 3 schools on the courses. The Guild awards grants for the Sail Training courses each year and we are delighted with the response.

A number of former pupils of the 3 schools are becoming apprenticed to Masters in the Guild and taking up the Freedom of the City.

We have also elected some younger members to the Court of the Guild. I am particularly pleased to welcome Angela Banwell from CLSG to the Court. There are some interesting social events coming up and I hope to see you there.

Finally thank you for your support for the Guild and may I wish you all a very Happy Christmas and New Year.

From the City, the Carmelite Street building, I trained to teach. I have taught in many primary schools in and around London. I am married to Allan, and have one daughter, Polly, who is an actress.

My passions are the theatre and art history. My faith is the centre of my existence. I couldn't live without Radio 4, perfume and seeing friends, especially my old school friends!

Is our Guild unique?

As promised in the last newsletter here is the start on a series of articles on the Livery Companies and Guilds of the City of London. (I am grateful to all members who have contributed)

Trade and craft associations have flourished all over Europe for many centuries, but the City of London companies, now collectively known as the Livery, are unique in their survival, number and diversity.

The social and economic conditions which gave birth to the original guilds have long since been overtaken by the development of industry and commerce, but the livery companies still flourish today as living institutions. Their survival has been achieved by doing what they have always done: fostering their trade in a wide context, servicing the community, and embracing modern skills and professions. Today there are 107 livery companies in the City of London.

Livery Companies were established to set high standards of craftsmanship and business conduct. They embodied activities similar to those carried out at present by employers' organisations, trade unions and professional institutions. To trade in the City, a person was required to be a Freeman of the City of London and a Freeman of the Livery Company related to his craft. The discipline exercised by this system accounted for London becoming a significant centre of international trade during the Middle Ages. Livery Companies also assumed responsibility for the education and training of apprentices to their craft. Indeed, it was initiatives taken by the Corporation and Livery Companies that led to the foundation of the City and Guilds of London Institute in 1878. Now acknowledged worldwide as a centre of technical excellence, City and Guilds created what has been described as Britain's first industrial University, the City & Guilds College of the Imperial College of Science and Technology, University of London. New Heads

We give a very warm welcome to the new head at City of London School for Girls Diane Vernon and the new head at City of London Freeman's School Philip MacDonald, both of whom attended the Sail Training presentations held earlier this year. We wish them every success in the challenging but exciting times ahead.

Some Livery Companies still own or manage schools and, in former times, their sense of social obligation often led to the assistance of Members who were experiencing personal or business difficulties.

One privilege still remains with regard to education and that is the admission of a Citizen of London's children to the City of London Freeman's School. Although this is still fee-paying, orphans of Freeman are still eligible as "Foundationers".

The Livery companies are ranked in order of precedence based on the time of their original acceptance by the Lord Mayor and Aldermen of the City. (although dating from disagreement over precedent order in the 'Middle Ages', the Merchant Taylors' and the Skinners change position annually; hence reputedly the expression 'to be at sixes and sevens')

Over the next series of newsletters, I intend to delve into each of the Livery Companies, Companies without Livery and Guilds to try to ascertain if our Guild truly is unique. That is to say, do any of the other companies, etc have a membership criteria other than having the Freedom of the City of London and recommendation by existing members of the Company, etc.

As there is an order of precedence, that is the order in which I will review so the first 10 to be looked at will be:

1. The Worshipful Company of Mercers (General Merchants)
2. The Worshipful Company of Grocers
3. The Worshipful Company of Drapers (Wool and cloth merchants)
4. The Worshipful Company of Fishmongers
5. The Worshipful Company of Goldsmiths
- 6/7. The Worshipful Company of Merchant Taylors (Tailors)
- 6/7. The Worshipful Company of Skinners (Fur Traders)
8. The Worshipful Company of Haberdashers
9. The Worshipful Company of Salters
10. The Worshipful Company of Ironmongers

(Please note that I have done and will do my best to ensure the accuracy of the information, However, I am not a historian and can give no guarantees – Edward Andrews) – to be continued in the next newsletter.

Wishing you all a very Happy Christmas and a healthy 2008
